

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
EASTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

TRACY N. STURCHIO, f/k/a/
RONALD L. STURCHIO,

Plaintiff,

v.

THOMAS J. RIDGE,
SECRETARY, DEPARTMENT
OF HOMELAND SECURITY,

Defendant.

NO. CV-03-0025-RHW

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

A bench trial in the above-captioned case was held in Spokane, Washington, beginning on May 9, 2005, and concluding on May 17, 2005. Plaintiff was represented by Larry Kuznetz. The Government was represented by Frank Wilson. These findings constitute the Court's final findings of facts and conclusions of law, as required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 52(a).

BACKGROUND FACTS

In August, 2004, with the help of an understanding family and wife, advanced medical science, supportive friends, and mental health professionals, Plaintiff Ronald Sturchio, at age 56, surgically and psychologically changed his gender from male to female.<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff is now Tracy Nicole Sturchio, and is

<sup>1</sup>The Court has used the female pronouns when referring to Plaintiff's testimony at trial, or when referring to events after October 3, 2002. In describing Plaintiff's life prior to October 3, 2002, the Court used male pronouns for ease of 1 successfully functioning in the workplace and home as a female. She claims, 2 however, that in the two years before she announced that she was changing her

3 gender and in the two months thereafter, the United States Border Patrol 4 discriminated against her, in violation of federal law. To understand the 5 perspective of the Plaintiff and the employees of the Border Patrol, the Court is 6 required to explore the life of the Plaintiff almost from its beginning through the 7 period in question.

8 A. Plaintiff's Background

9 Plaintiff was born on May 18, 1948. Anatomically, he was a male. As a 10 child, however, Plaintiff felt different—she testified that “something wasn’t right.” 11 He liked to dress up in his mother’s clothes. He wore his mother’s make-up when 12 his parents were not at home, and found himself more interested in activities 13 associated with girls than boys. He started to pray to God to change him from a 14 boy to a girl. These feelings caused internal conflict within him. He felt dirty and 15 embarrassed, and perceived that his actions and activities were contrary to his 16 religious upbringing. In Plaintiff’s words, she felt “less than human.” His father 17 was not understanding or kind about his son’s differences and, over time, Plaintiff 18 suppressed that side of himself that identified with female activities and traits.
19 Consequently, Plaintiff kept his feelings secret and did not discuss them with 20 anyone.

21 During high school, he dated girls and felt comfortable living his life as a 22 male. At age 17, his girlfriend became pregnant and they married. He fathered 23 two children during this first marriage. That marriage ended in divorce in 1972.
24 He married another woman, but that marriage lasted only about two years. He 25 married Kim, his current wife, in 1976, and they have three children.

26 In the late 1980's, Plaintiff once again began to experience his earlier 27 identification with the female gender. He explains this reawakening as having 28 _____

reference.

1 been caused by an accidental exposure to chemicals containing female hormones.
2 While the explanation is not totally convincing, the need for the explanation is 3 understandable.

4 Plaintiff described the accident in the following manner: In 1987, he was 5 living in Wyoming with his wife and children. In August of that year, he had some 6 time off and decided to travel alone to visit some friends in California. Out of 7 boredom or a sense of adventure, he decided to take some back roads and got lost.
8 He came across a truck accident, heard a groan, and realized that the driver was 9 pinned in the cab. He called for help but could not reach anyone. He made up his 10 mind to stay with the driver and render assistance until someone came.<sup>2</sup> The truck 11 was carrying an oily substance, which had leaked out of the tank and coated the 12 driver. There was so much of the substance that Plaintiff had to lift the head of the 13 driver to keep him from drowning. In the process of assisting the driver, Plaintiff 14 was covered with the substance as well. Help did not arrive for four hours.

15 A tow truck, which was camouflaged and had government plates, eventually 16 arrived. The letter "A" was on the plates. Another truck arrived with protective 17 suits. The people in the truck showered Plaintiff and drew his blood. He was told 18 that the substance was going to a cattle yard to be used to put weight on cattle. He 19 later learned that the letter "A" on the plates stood for "Agriculture." After the 20 accident, he went home. He never found out exactly what was in the substance but 21 was told that it contained estrogen and progesterone. Shortly thereafter, he felt 22 nauseated and had flu-like symptoms, but did not seek medical treatment. By 23 November of that year, he noticed that his nipples were leaking, he was starting to 24 put on weight around his hips, and his breasts were enlarging. Again, he did not 25 seek medical advice regarding these symptoms.

26 Plaintiff testified that the agency involved sent him a 5" by 5" box with 27 tubes and needles. He was instructed to draw blood and return it by mail to the 28 <sup>2</sup>Plaintiff had prior training as an Emergency Medical Technician (EMT).

1 agency in Denver. He did so on several occasions. Ultimately, the agency stopped 2 communicating with him. He was advised by friends that medicines could be 3 taken to reverse the process, but he decided not to take any action to do so.

4 This explanation of the changes that were happening to Plaintiff is not 5 convincing to the Court, although Plaintiff may have believed such an explanation
6 was probably necessary to explain to others the changes evident in his body. There 7 are several reasons for this conclusion. First, there was no medical testimony that 8 Plaintiff's one-time exposure to such chemicals would cause such long-term 9 results. Second, Plaintiff could not identify where the accident occurred, the 10 names of any of the people involved in the accident, the name of the agency 11 involved, the names of the agents that came to his house, the address of the agency 12 to which he sent the blood samples, nor any other details that normally would be 13 known after such a traumatic event with such startling consequences. Third, 14 Plaintiff's failure to seek medical treatment or to take actions to reverse the process 15 is not believable, unless Plaintiff was a willing participant in the process. This 16 conclusion is driven by the testimony that Plaintiff started taking the same 17 chemicals—estrogen and progesterone—under a doctor's care in 1996. The 18 doctor's notes reflect that Plaintiff told him that he started taking the drugs in 1991.
19 These same notes reflect that Plaintiff told the doctor that he had been exposed to a 20 fertilizer in the accident, not a feed additive. Fourth, Plaintiff's wife testified that 21 they used blood draw kits available to them through their employment to send 22 samples to the agency, which was in contradiction to Plaintiff's testimony.
23 Ultimately, the need to have a story to explain the changes is evident from the 24 testimony of Plaintiff about his earlier childhood. There had to be substantial 25 conflict going on concerning the reawakened feelings regarding Plaintiff's sexual 26 identity. Earlier, when identifying as a female, he had felt guilty, dirty, and as if he 27 were not human. He had felt that he was acting contrary to his religious 28 upbringing. It appears those conflicts had not been dealt with and were part of 1 Plaintiff's process of exploration in the 1990's and 2000's that ultimately led to the 2 successful transformation surgery in 2004.

3 These facts lead the Court to conclude that Plaintiff began to be affected by 4 his feelings of conflict with his gender as early as 1987, and he began to take 5 prescription medication to deal with it. As a result, he needed to have a story that 6 explained his situation in a manner that permitted him to live as a man to the 7 outside world while dealing with his own conflicts concerning his gender. This 8 conclusion, however, does not affect the Court's analysis in determining whether 9 the United States Border Patrol created a hostile workplace, or sexually 10 discriminated or retaliated against Plaintiff. Nonetheless, Plaintiff's story affected 11 how management and her coworkers related to her and treated her at the 12 workplace.

13 B. Plaintiff's Employment with the United States Border Patrol

14 Plaintiff began working for the United States Border Patrol, now the United 15 States Customs and Border Protection, in 1991. In July 1998, Plaintiff transferred 16 to the Spokane sector of the United State Border Patrol and began working as a 17 Supervisory Telecommunications Specialist. At that time, Plaintiff was known as 18 Ron Sturchio, and was participating in society as a male.

19 Management considered Plaintiff to be an excellent electronics technician.
20 Shortly after Plaintiff began working at the Spokane sector, however, his 21 coworkers complained to management about Plaintiff discussing the subject of his 22 physical appearance with them. Management considered the discussions with 23 coworkers that were initiated by Plaintiff to be inappropriate, and this conclusion 24 was not unreasonable, given the complaints and their unwelcome nature.<sup>3</sup> As 25

26 <sup>3</sup>In December 1998, Steven Garrett, Assistant Chief Patrol Agent, met with 27 Plaintiff to discuss the issue of his inappropriate comments to his subordinates, and 28 told him not to discuss his physical appearance unless the person invited the

1 noted, in 1996, Plaintiff had advanced enough in his acceptance of his gender 2 conflict that he sought medical advice in Oakland, California, and began to take 3 estrogen and progesterone by prescription. These drugs cause a male to develop 4 female physical characteristics, including enlarged breasts. While employed at the 5 Spokane sector, Plaintiff had a feminine appearance that included enlarged breasts.
6 Plaintiff's feminine appearance was noticeable, at times, when Plaintiff wore t-7 shirts or polo shirts, and at other times, was disguised so that her breasts were not 8 noticeable. At work, Plaintiff dressed as a man, wore large shirts, and generally 9 tried to hide her breast development from coworkers. Nevertheless, her coworkers 10 were aware of her enlarged breasts.

11 As Ron, Plaintiff recounted the story of the accident, unsolicited, to his 12 coworkers numerous times. In doing so, he presented himself to his coworkers as a 13 male who suffered an unfortunate accident and was not happy about the changes 14 that were taking place with his body. In reality, while Ron was explaining to his 15 coworkers that the accident affected his appearance, he also was secretly taking 16 estrogen that is known to cause the same effect.

17 This conflict between reality—that he was dealing with a gender conflict and 18 was taking estrogen, which causes a male to develop female characteristics—and 19 fiction—that the accident caused the changes with which Plaintiff was 20 unhappy—created difficulties and confusion in his relationship with his coworkers.
21 Testimony revealed that Plaintiff brought up his physical appearance and the 22 accident, unsolicited and in a manner that made the coworker hearing the story 23 uncomfortable. Understandably, the discomfort was caused because the subject 24 was too intimate for the type of relationship between Plaintiff and the coworker, or 25 it was interpreted as inappropriate because of the coworker's belief system. Ron's

26 _____
27 comments. Plaintiff does not contend that the meeting or the directive to not 28 discuss his physical appearance was improper, or amounted to sexual harassment or discrimination.

1 unsolicited discussion of his breasts and the accident with coworkers who were 2 merely acquaintances of Ron, was easy to misinterpret. From Plaintiff's 3 perspective, talking about his body was a comfortable subject to discuss with his 4 coworkers. From the perspective of his coworkers, however, it could have been 5 interpreted as an effort by him to become closer to the coworker than was 6 appropriate, given the relationship. Testimony revealed that many of his 7 coworkers were uncomfortable in discussing Plaintiff's appearance with him. In 8 our society, most people relate to others under the assumption that they are who 9 they appear to be, i.e., male or female, and content to be so. Men do not normally 10 talk about their breasts, enlarged or not, with mere acquaintances. Women do not 11 talk about their breasts, enlarged or not, with mere acquaintances. In that context, 12 a male talking about an accident and the development of female characteristics 13 would be unusual, and a feeling of discomfort by the coworker would not be 14 unusual or unexpected. At this point in time, Ron's coworker's knew him only as 15 a male, and had no idea that he had a gender identity disorder. It is understandable 16 that his comments could have been taken as unusual and uncomfortable sexual 17 comments toward his male coworkers. Thus, while the Court does not pass 18 judgment on those who were uncomfortable speaking with Plaintiff regarding her 19 appearance, their discomfort was understandable, given the topic of discussion, the 20 environment in which it was being spoken, and the fact that the coworkers were 21 receiving mixed signals regarding Plaintiff's gender identity.

22 Shortly after Plaintiff began working at the Spokane sector, he began to have 23 difficulty with two employees. Plaintiff had never acted as a supervisor prior to 24 working at the Spokane sector. At first, he worked in tandem with the former 25 supervisor whom he was hired to replace. Soon after Plaintiff was hired, the sector 26 hired Robert Simer and Hal McCormick as telecommunications technicians.
27 Plaintiff was in charge of their supervision. These employees were difficult to 28 manage. Mr. Simer and Mr. McCormick complained constantly to management

1 concerning Plaintiff's management style. Plaintiff, in like manner, complained 2 about Mr. Simer's and Mr. McCormick's work ethics and abilities, and the fact that 3 they would circumvent his authority by going to management for supervision.
4 These conflicts continued throughout his tenure as supervisor of the shop at the 5 Spokane sector.

6 In August 2002, unbeknownst to her coworkers or management, Plaintiff 7 began to make preparations to start living as a woman. Plaintiff did not have a 8 doctor directing her gender care at this time, but was aware of a protocol that was 9 usually followed for people who were considering gender reassignment surgery.
10 The protocol was contained in the Harry Benjamin International Gender Dysphoria 11 Association's Standards of Care for Gender Identity Disorders, Sixth Version, 12 February 2001. According to these standards, if a person is considering 13 transitioning from male to female, it is recommended that the person undergo a 14 real-life experience in which the person lives outwardly in society as their 15 preferred gender. Plaintiff legally changed her name in August 2002. She also had 16 her driver's license and social security records changed to reflect her new name 17 and gender.

18 On October 3, 2002, without prior notice (except to Debra Lutz), Plaintiff 19 reported to the Spokane sector dressed as a woman. Prior to this date, Plaintiff had 20 met with Ms. Lutz and told her that she was planning on changing her name and 21 gender. On that day, Plaintiff wore make-up and women's clothing and wore her 22 hair down. She also met with Steven Garrett, Assistant Chief Patrol Agent, who 23 sent out a mass email, which Plaintiff had approved, explaining Plaintiff's name 24 and appearance change.

25 When Plaintiff made her transition from male to female, she did not provide 26 the United States Border Patrol with any information regarding her gender 27 disorder, or the Harry Benjamin standards. She did not discuss with them her 28 reasons for transitioning from female to male. She did not tell them she was

1 following medical protocol. Management complied with Plaintiff's request to be 2 referred to as Tracy and, as discussed above, informed her coworkers of the 3 change.

4 OVERVIEW OF TITLE VII CLAIMS

5 In Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228 (1989), the Supreme Court 6 held that discrimination based on sex stereotyping violates Title VII. Id. at 252.
 7 Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 provides, in relevant part, that "[i]t shall 8 be an unlawful employment practice for an employer . . . to discriminate against 9 any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of 10 employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national 11 origin." 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1). Plaintiff alleges that she was subject to a 12 hostile workplace environment, was retaliated against for complaining of the 13 gender discrimination, and was discriminated against on account of her gender, in 14 violation of Title VII.

15 A. Hostile Workplace Environment

16 "When the workplace is permeated with discriminatory intimidation, 17 ridicule, and insult that is sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of 18 the victim's employment and create an abusive working environment, Title VII is 19 violated." Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 U.S. 17, 21 (1993). In order to succeed 20 in her hostile work environment claim, Plaintiff must establish that: (1) she was 21 subjected to verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature; (2) the conduct was 22 unwelcome; and (3) the conduct was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the 23 conditions of her employment and create an abusive work environment. Porter v.
 24 California Dep't of Corrections, 383 F.3d 1018, 1027 (9th Cir. 2004). Plaintiff also 25 must show that any harassment took place "because of sex." Oncale v. Sundowner 26 Offshore Servs., Inc., 523 U.S. 75, 79 (1998). In order to show that the conduct 27 was ongoing and persistent harassment, Plaintiff needs to prove that her workplace 28 was "both objectively and subjectively offensive, one that a reasonable person

1 would find hostile or abusive, and one that the victim in fact did perceive to be so.”
2 Nichols v. Azteca Restaurant Enters., Inc., 256 F.3d 864, 871-72 (9th Cir. 2001), 3 quoting Faragher v. City of Boca Roton, 524 U.S. 775, 787 (1998). To determine 4 whether an environment is sufficiently hostile or abusive to violate Title VII, the 5 Court considers the totality of the circumstances, including the “frequency of the 6 discriminatory conduct; its severity; whether it is physically threatening or 7 humiliating, or a mere offensive utterance; and whether it reasonably interferes 8 with an employee’s work performance.” Id. at 872, quoting Harris, 510 U.S. at 23.
9 A hostile environment may result from a single instance of sexual harassment if the 10 harassing conduct is sufficiently severe. Id.

11 B. Retaliation

12 Title VII prohibits employers from discriminating against an employee 13 because that employee “has opposed any practice made an unlawful employment 14 practice by this subchapter, or because he has made a charge, testified, assisted, or 15 participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or hearing under this 16 subchapter.” 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-3(a). To establish a prima facie case of retaliation, 17 an employee must show that (1) she engaged in a protected activity; (2) her 18 employer subjected her to an adverse employment action; and (3) a causal link 19 exists between the protected activity and the adverse action. Ray v. Henderson, 20 217 F.3d 1234, 1240 (9th Cir. 2000). If Plaintiff meets her burden in asserting a 21 prima facie retaliation claim, the burden shifts to Defendant to articulate a 22 legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for its decision. Id. If Defendant articulates 23 such a reason, Plaintiff bears the ultimate burden of demonstrating that the reason 24 was merely a pretext for a discriminatory motive. Id. When adverse employment 25 decisions closely follow complaints of discrimination, retaliatory intent may be 26 inferred. Villiarimo v. Aloha Island Air, Inc., 281 F.3d 1054, 1065 (9th Cir. 2002) 27 (holding that the causal link between a protected activity and the alleged retaliatory 28 action “can be inferred from timing alone” when there is a close proximity between

1 the two); Bell v. Clackamas County, 341 F.3d 858, 865-66 (9th Cir. 2003) (holding 2 that proximity in time may, by itself, constitute circumstantial evidence of 3 retaliation). Making an informal complaint to a supervisor, as well as making a 4 formal complaint with the EEOC, are protected activities. Ray, 217 F.3d at 1240 5 n.3.

6 C. Sexual Discrimination

7 In order to prevail in her sexual discrimination claim, Plaintiff must establish 8 a prima facie case of discrimination. Vasquez v. County of Los Angeles, 349 F.3d 9 634, 638 (9th Cir. 2003). To do so, Plaintiff must offer evidence that gives rise to 10 an inference of unlawful discrimination, either through the framework set forth in 11 McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 (1973), or with direct or 12 circumstantial evidence of discriminatory intent. Id. Under the McDonnell 13 Douglas framework, unlawful discrimination is presumed if the plaintiff can show 14 that “(1) she belongs to a protected class, (2) she was performing according to her 15 employer's legitimate expectations, (3) she suffered an adverse employment action, 16 and (4) other employees with qualifications similar to her own were treated more 17 favorably.” Godwin v. Hunt Wesson, Inc., 150 F.3d 1217, 1220 (9th Cir. 1998), 18 citing McDonnell Douglas Corp., 411 U.S. at 802. Direct evidence is “evidence 19 which, if believed, proves the fact [of discriminatory animus] without inference or 20 presumption.” Id. at 1221 (alteration in original).

21 If Plaintiff succeeds in doing so, then the burden shifts to Defendant to 22 articulate a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for its allegedly discriminatory 23 conduct. Vasquez, 349 F.3d at 638. If Defendant provides such a reason, the 24 burden shifts back to Plaintiff to show that Defendant's reason is a pretext for 25 discrimination. Id. In a mixed-motive case, that is, where the employer has 26 offered more than one reason for the action that it took, and at least one of the 27 reasons may be legitimate, the trier of fact must determine first whether the 28 discriminatory reason was “a motivating factor” in the challenged action. If the

1 answer to this question is in the affirmative, then the employer has violated Title
2 VII. Stegall v. Citadel Broadcasting Co., 350 F.3d 1061, 1067 (9th Cir. 2003).
3 Plaintiff can show pretext directly, then, by showing that discrimination more 4 likely motivated Defendant, or indirectly, by showing that the Defendant's 5 explanation is unworthy of credence. Vasquez, 349 F.3d at 641.

6 In its Motion to Dismiss, the Government argued that Plaintiff, as a 7 transgender person, does not receive protection under Title VII. The Court 8 disagreed because recent case law supported the premise that discrimination based 9 on sexual stereotypes violates Title VII.<sup>4</sup> In this regard, Plaintiff is asserting that 10 prior to October, 2002, he was discriminated against because he had a feminine 11 appearance, and after October, 2002, she was discriminated against because she 12 changed her gender and was now participating in the workplace as a female.

13 ANALYSIS

14 The record is replete with complaints, labor grievances, EEOC complaints 15 filed by Plaintiff, bad work evaluations, suspensions, and other actions and 16 inactions by management that would constitute adverse work consequences if 17 motivated by gender. The Court has reviewed at length the actions and inactions 18 alleged to be discriminatory. While the Court may not agree with the specific 19 action or management's failure to act in response to the complaints made by 20 Plaintiff, this is not the test that the Court must apply. To find for Plaintiff, the 21 Court must conclude that the motivations for the actions or inactions were gender-22 related, retaliatory, or were a pretext for gender discrimination.

- 15 (10) February 8, 2002 - Plaintiff wrote memo to Chief Patrol Ortega
- 16 regarding missing equipment. (Ex 254.) In the memo, Plaintiff
- 17 implied that Mr. Simer may have taken some equipment when he left
- 18 his employment at the Spokane sector. Upon investigation, it was
- 19 revealed that these items were personal protective equipment that
- 20 were not expected to be returned. Plaintiff subsequently asked that
- 21 the memo be disregarded.
- 22 (11) June 11, 2002 - Plaintiff received letter of reprimand for discussing
- 23 with other employees complaints he had filed. (Ex. 261.)
- 24 (12) September 2002 - Border Patrol Agent Christopher Gomez submitted
- 25 a memo to Chief Patrol Agent of the Spokane sector stating that when
- 26 he and Plaintiff were working at an isolated location, Plaintiff
- 27

28 <sup>5</sup>The business card stated: "You are cordially invited to go fuck yourself."

1 discussed his physical appearance with Agent Gomez, and Agent
2 Gomez was uncomfortable with the conversation. (Ex. 48.)

3 (13) September 30, 2002 - Management issued proposed disciplinary 4 action in which management proposed suspending Plaintiff from duty 5 without pay for fourteen days. (Ex. 51.) The proposal made three 6 charges: failure to report vehicle accident; lack of candor; and failure 7 to follow direct supervisory instruction. Plaintiff responded to the 8 proposal, and only the charge for failure to follow a direct supervisor 9 instruction, which involved the Gomez incident, was sustained. The 10 fourteen-day suspension was reduced to three days. (Ex. 56.)

11 Of the numerous items claimed by the Plaintiff to be improper or 12 discriminatory, the Court finds, after weighing the evidence, insufficient evidence 13 to conclude that they were gender-motivated, retaliatory, or constituted a hostile 14 work environment. It was clear from reviewing the evidence that during the period 15 in question, the workplace environment at the Spokane sector shop was permeated 16 with dissension, mistrust, and acrimony. This environment, while unpleasant from 17 Plaintiff's standpoint, is not enough to sustain a claim under Title VII, however.
18 See Oncale, 523 U.S. at 80 (confirming that Title VII is not "a general civility code 19 for the American workplace").

20 A. Hostile Work Environment

21 In order to succeed in establishing her hostile work environment claim, 22 Plaintiff must show that she was subjected to verbal or physical conduct of a sexual 23 nature. Porter, 383 F.3d at 1027. Of all the instances presented at trial, only two 24 involved verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature: (1) Questioning by Wayne 25 Reome; and (2) Derogatory Business Card.

26 (1) Questioning by Wayne Reome

27 Marvin Foust began supervising the Electronics shop in October 1999, and 28 he related that the shop seemed to be running well until January 2000. At that

1 time, Plaintiff reported that Wayne Reome, a union steward, asked certain 2 employees of the Spokane sector two specific questions: (1) whether the employee 3 was offended by Plaintiff's appearance of femininity; and (2) whether he made any 4 sexual advances toward them. Mr. Reome denied asking the questions in this 5 form, but admitted asking questions about Plaintiff in his capacity as a union
6 steward or officer. The Court finds that the questions regarding Plaintiff's 7 appearance and whether he made any sexual advances were actually asked.
8 Numerous employees of the Spokane sector testified that Mr. Reome approached 9 them and asked these particular questions. It is alleged that these questions were 10 improper and constituted a hostile work environment, and that management did 11 nothing to prevent the event from reoccurring.

12       Given the fact that Plaintiff had discussed his breasts and the accident with 13 employees and some employees felt uncomfortable about it, it is not clear that a 14 union official would be acting improperly in inquiring about the subject.
15 Plaintiff's unsolicited discussion of the subject could be considered unwelcome, 16 and the subject of corrective action by management or grievance by the union.
17 Secondly, the questions are not of such a nature that they created a hostile work
18 environment. Even if the questioning was improper, management told Mr. Reome 19 to stop the inquiry which, at the time, was all that was legally required.

20       On December 20, 2002, Plaintiff notified Mr. Garrett that Mr. Reome was 21 again asking questions regarding Plaintiff's appearance and whether she had made 22 any sexual advances toward her coworkers. Specifically, the memos that were 23 submitted by Pat Dale and Johnny Sievers used the phrase "hit on." Mr. Reome 24 again denied asking other employees if Plaintiff had "hit on" on anyone. The 25 matter was investigated by LeAlan Pinkerton, Assistant Chief Patrol Agent, and he 26 concluded that the claims of misconduct were general, conclusory, and non-27 specific. He further concluded that even if the alleged statements had been made, 28 it would not constitute harassment because it would not alter the conditions of 1 Plaintiff's employment, nor would it have created an abusive environment.

2 While Mr. Reome may have not used the exact words of "hit on," there was 3 once again corroborating testimony that he did, in fact, question Plaintiff's 4 coworkers regarding her appearance and whether she made any sexual advances
5 toward them. Nevertheless, the questioning by Mr. Reome does not support a 6 finding that the workplace at the Spokane sector was so permeated with 7 discriminatory intimidation, ridicule, or insult that was sufficiently severe or 8 pervasive to alter the conditions of the victim's employment. Over two years 9 passed between the questioning of Mr. Reome. While the evidence is clear that 10 Plaintiff was subjectively offended by the questioning, such questioning was not 11 objectively offensive.

12 Like the perception problems experienced by coworkers earlier when 13 Plaintiff talked about her breasts, it is not unusual that some employees would 14 wonder about the significance of a change in dress and name at the workplace.
15 There had been no explanation of the reasons for the change, the length of its 16 duration, the protocol, or the anticipation of surgery. To the uninformed, there was 17 a male body covered by female clothing. In this context, the inquiries by Mr.
18 Reome, while insensitive, do not constitute harassment, and were not so pervasive 19 as to create a hostile work environment. There also is no reason to believe that the 20 reaction would have been any different if the change had been from female to 21 male.

22 (2) Derogatory Business Card

23 Mr. McCormick's handing out of a business card printed with a derogatory 24 comment was conduct that was sexual in nature. At trial, Plaintiff testified that Mr.
25 McCormick had shown the card to many of the employees in the shop. Plaintiff 26 did not find it offensive at the time, and it was only after he pondered the message 27 on the card that he felt offended by the card. The distribution of the business card 28 was an isolated incident, and there was no evidence in the record that it ever

1 happened again. While a hostile environment may result from a single instance of 2 sexual harassment if the harassing conduct is sufficiently severe, Brooks v. City of 3 San Mateo, 229 F.3d 917, 925, 927 (9th Cir. 2000), this isolated incident is not 4 sufficiently severe to establish a hostile work environment.

5       It is apparent to the Court that Plaintiff felt isolated and picked upon by her 6 coworkers and management during the period in question. Given that she was 7 secretly taking hormones to change her appearance from male to female, it is not 8 surprising that she believed that people disapproved of what they saw and, 9 therefore, discriminated against her on that basis. The Court is confident that 10 Plaintiff's appearance caused some people to reject her and caused her not to be 11 accepted in the same manner as coworkers. Part of the Plaintiff's sense of 12 discomfort and isolation was caused by her own heightened sensitivity, and part by 13 reality. However, the evidence did not convince the Court that the Plaintiff's 14 appearance motivated conduct that created a hostile work environment because of 15 gender. There is no evidence in the record that Plaintiff was forcibly subjected to 16 sex-related, humiliating actions, physical assault made in a sexual manner, or 17 threats of rape, see Oncale, 523 U.S. at 76; that she was subject to grabbing, 18 poking, rubbing, or mouthing areas of the body linked to sexuality, see Rene v.
19 MGM Grand Hotel, Inc., 305 F.3d 1061, 1065 (9th Cir. 2002); or that she was the 20 subject to any name calling, taunting, or teasing, see Nichols, 256 F.3d at 872. It 21 does not appear that Plaintiff was ever the subject of simple teasing or offhand 22 comments regarding her appearance. See Faragher, 524 U.S. at 788 (holding that 23 "simple teasing, offhand comments, and isolated incidents (unless extremely 24 serious) will not amount to discriminatory changes in the terms and conditions of 25 employment").

26       Plaintiff has not met her burden of establishing that the workplace at the 27 Spokane sector was permeated with discriminatory intimidation, ridicule, and 28 insult that is sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of her

1 employment. As such, her claim under Title VII that she was subject to a hostile 2 workplace environment fails.

3 B. Retaliation Claims

4 Plaintiff asserts that she has been repeatedly retaliated against as a result of 5 her filing EEO complaints. It appears that Plaintiff first contacted the EEO in 6 September 2000. Plaintiff received a notice of right to file on January 16, 2001, 7 and he filed a formal complaint on January 24, 2001. In the formal complaint, 8 Plaintiff alleged he was being harassed regarding his physical appearance. Plaintiff 9 filed another EEO complaint in February 28, 2003, alleging that she was being 10 retaliated against for filing her first EEO complaint.

11 In order to succeed in her Title VII retaliation claim, Plaintiff must show that 12 a causal link exists between the protected activity and the adverse action. Ray, 217
13 F.3d at 1240. It is undisputed that the Plaintiff engaged in protected activity, and it 14 is undisputed that Plaintiff suffered adverse employment action. The key issue, 15 then, is whether the adverse employment action was as a result of Plaintiff filing 16 her EEOC complaints.

17 At the trial, Plaintiff did not specify the particular acts of retaliation that she 18 is asserting. In her second EEO complaint, however, Plaintiff identified the 19 following instances of retaliation that have not already been addressed by the Court 20 and merit discussion: (1) the extension of the 1999/2000 performance plan and the 21 minimally satisfactory rating for the October 1, 2001- September 30, 2002
22 performance evaluation; (2) complaint by Mr. McCormick regarding AIDS 23 comment; (3) complaints by coworkers; (4) the change in position from 24 Supervisory Telecommunications Specialist, GS-391, to Telecommunication 25 Specialists, GS-391; and (5) the October 2002 disciplinary action. (Ex. 333).

26 (1) Performance Appraisals

27 The United States Border Patrol evaluates its employees using a multi-28 phased system. The Performance Appraisal Record consisted of a Performance

1 Work Plan (PWP), Progress Review Record, Performance Achievements, and 2 Individual Element Ratings. The PWP set forth the job elements. The Progress
3 Review Record was generally completed mid-year<sup>6</sup> and the individual element 4 ratings were issued at the end of the rating period.

5 Since transferring to the Spokane Sector, and during the relevant time period 6 of this lawsuit, Plaintiff received six performance evaluations spanning discrete 7 rating periods: (1) October 1, 1998-September 30, 1999 (Ex. 80); (2) October 1, 8 1999-September 30, 2000 (Ex. 81); (3) October 1, 2000-March 31, 2001 (Ex. 82); 9 (4) May 1, 2001-September 30, 2001 (Ex. 83); (5) October 1, 2001-September 30, 10 2002 (Ex. 84); and (6) October 1, 2002-September 30, 2003 (Ex. 85).

11 The Performance Work Plan (PWP) sets forth the job elements against 12 which the employee will be evaluated. Mr. Foust testified that at some point after 13 the April 2000 progress review, management determined that the original PWP did 14 not provide job elements to allow it to evaluate Plaintiff's supervisory abilities.
15 According to Mr. Foust, a final review was not conducted in September 2000, 16 because Plaintiff's PWP had been changed to include additional job elements 17 involving supervision. According to an email written by Loretta Lopez-Mossman, 18 Plaintiff was not evaluated in September 2000, because he was relieved of his 19 supervisory duties on July 21, 2000 during the OIA investigation. When Plaintiff 20 was reinstated as a supervisor in October 2000, he was issued a revised PWP at 21 that time. Consequently, he was not given a final PWP for the rating period 22 October 1, 1999 to September 30, 2000. Instead, he was given a final rating on 23 March 21, 2001.

24 Plaintiff asserts that the failure to provide a final evaluation in October 2000 25 was retaliatory as a result of his contacting the EEO in September 2000. Case law 26

27 <sup>6</sup>Mr. Foust testified that management generally tries to conduct two 28 evaluations during the year before the final evaluation.

1 has held that proximity in time may, by itself, constitute circumstantial evidence of 2 retaliation. Assuming that Plaintiff has made a prima facie case of retaliation
3 based on proximity of time alone, Defendant has met its burden of showing 4 legitimate nondiscriminatory reasons for not providing a final evaluation in 5 September 2000 and extending the final evaluation period to March 2001. The 6 final evaluation was not done in September 2000, because Plaintiff had been under 7 a disciplinary investigation and was relieved of his supervisory duties. Also, 8 Defendant explained that it was unable to successfully evaluate Plaintiff's 9 supervisory abilities because the PWP did not adequately set forth the job elements 10 that needed to be evaluated. Once the new PWP was issued, ninety days had to 11 pass before Plaintiff could be evaluated under the new PWP. Given that Defendant 12 articulated a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for the decision to extend the 13 evaluation, Plaintiff needed to demonstrate that the reason for extending the 14 evaluation was merely a pretext, and management's motivation for extending the 15 evaluation period was discriminatory. The evidence does not support a finding of 16 pretext, or discriminatory motive.

17 Plaintiff asserts that Mr. Foust retaliated against her for filing her EEO 18 complaint by rating her as only minimally satisfactory for the October 30, 2001-19 September 30, 2002 period, when previously she had been rated either outstanding 20 or fully successful. Plaintiff had filed her formal EEO complaint in January 2001.
21 Over one and a half years had passed by the time the evaluation was complete.
22 Thus, no inference of retaliatory intent can be made. During that time, there had 23 been numerous complaints regarding Plaintiff's supervisory abilities. Plaintiff has 24 not met her burden of showing a causal link between the protected activity and the 25 low performance evaluation rating.

26 (2) Complaint by Mr. McCormick

27 In late 2001, Mr. McCormick had injured himself at work, and consequently, 28 there may have been a small amount of blood that was left on a machine. Plaintiff

1 made a comment to Mr. Simer regarding the blood on the machine and Mr.
2 McCormick interpreted the comment to mean that Plaintiff was insinuating that 3 Mr. McCormick had AIDS. Mr. McCormick's written complaint is an outgrowth
4 of the acrimony and lack of communication that permeated the Spokane sector 5 shop. According to Plaintiff's testimony, she meant nothing by the comment to 6 Mr. Simer, other than to be concerned about workplace safety. Mr. McCormick 7 interpreted the statement to mean something more. Rather than being retaliatory, 8 the complaint was based on misperceptions and misunderstandings. Moreover, it 9 is not clear that Plaintiff suffered an adverse employment action on account of Mr.
10 McCormick's complaint.

11 (3) Complaints by Coworkers

12 Plaintiff also asserts that the majority of complaints by her coworkers were 13 in retaliation for her filing her EEO complaints, including union grievances. As 14 discussed above, there was little direct evidence in the record that would suggest 15 that these complaints were motivated by discriminatory intent. Management had to 16 respond to these complaints and they did not do so in a discriminatory manner.
17 Also, management did not have control over the union activities.

18 (4) Change in Status

19 On December 2, 2002, Plaintiff received notice that on July 14, 2002, her 20 position was changed from Supervisory Telecommunications Specialist, GS-391, 21 to Telecommunications Specialist, GS-391. Testimony revealed that no one from 22 the Spokane sector asked for this change. Instead, the change was made through 23 the personnel division and was due to the number of employees that Plaintiff was 24 supervising. Even if Plaintiff were to establish a casual link between her filing of 25 the EEO complaint and the subsequent reclassification, Defendant has articulated a 26 legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for its decision, and there is no showing of 27 pretext or discriminatory motive.

28 (5) October 2002 disciplinary action

1 In September, 2002, Plaintiff was issued a proposed disciplinary action.
2 Although the proposal alleged three charges, only the charge for failure to follow a 3 direct supervisor instruction was sustained. Plaintiff was suspended for three days.
4 The incident that provided the basis for this charge was the Agent Gomez incident, 5 as discussed infra. This disciplinary action occurred roughly over two years after 6 Plaintiff had filed her first EEO complaint. There is no causal link between this 7 action and the filing of the EEO complaint.

8 Accordingly, Plaintiff has failed to establish a causal connection between 9 any adverse employment action and her filing her EEO complaints. There is no 10 evidence in the record that any action taken by Defendant was retaliatory or based 11 on a discriminatory motive.

12 C. Sexual Discrimination

13 In order to prevail in her sexual discrimination claim, Plaintiff must establish 14 a prima facie case of discrimination. Vasquez, 349 F.3d at 638. To do so, Plaintiff 15 must present evidence with direct or circumstantial evidence of discriminatory 16 intent, or show that she suffered an adverse employment action and other 17 employees with qualifications similar to her own were treated more favorably.
18 Godwin, 150 F.3d at 1220. If Plaintiff succeeds in establishing a prima facie case, 19 she must also show that Defendant's actions were motivated on account of Ron's 20 failure to act or look as a male stereotypically would, or were motivated on account 21 of Tracy's gender.

22 Plaintiff's claims of sexual discrimination can be logically divided into two 23 periods: from (1) January 1, 2000 to October 2, 2002, the time period when 24 Plaintiff was working as a man and his gender identity conflict was unknown to 25 coworkers or management; and (2) from October 3, 2002 to December 31, 2002, 26 the time period after Plaintiff advised management and coworkers that he was now 27 a woman. Plaintiff alleges that many instances presented at trial is evidence of 28 sexual discrimination during the January 1, 2000 to October, 2, 2002: (a) Agent

1 Gomez's accusation; (b) disciplinary actions taken by management; (c) Actions 2 taken by Mr. Simer and Mr. McCormick; and (d) Threats by Mr. McCormick.
3 Plaintiff alleges the following instances as evidence of sexual discrimination 4 during the October 3, 2002 to December 31, 2002: (a) Prohibition on speaking 5 about personal issues; (b) Prohibition on wearing a dress; and (c) Prohibition on 6 using women's restroom.

7 (1) January 1, 2000 to October 2, 2002

8 (a) Agent Gomez's Accusations

9 One of the instances asserted by Plaintiff as evidence of sexual 10 discrimination involved a claim by Border Patrol Agent Gomez that Plaintiff made 11 him uncomfortable in a discussion at an isolated site by talking about personal 12 matters. Plaintiff was disciplined for this conduct. The Court is concerned about 13 the lack of memory of the details of the event by Gomez, and the inconsistencies in 14 the dates of the occurrence reflected in his report made to management. Plaintiff 15 testified that she was with Gomez two weeks earlier than recorded by Gomez, but 16 denied that a personal conversation took place.

17 In order to conclude that this incident is evidence of a Title VII violation, the 18 Court would have to find that Gomez is lying, that there was a conspiracy to 19 fabricate evidence in order to damage Plaintiff, and the conspiracy included the 20 Deputy Chief, Chief, and perhaps others, as well as Agent Gomez. The evidence 21 does not support such a conclusion. The Court heard Plaintiff's admission that she 22 was with Gomez on a date in close proximity with the date recorded by Gomez.
23 Secondly, testimony revealed that on several other occasions, Plaintiff had 24 discussed personal matters with acquaintance coworkers that were unsolicited.
25 Given the Court's opportunity to view the exhibits and listen to the witnesses, the 26 Court does not conclude that Border Patrol management induced Gomez to lie, or 27 that the disciplinary action taken as a result of Agent Gomez's report were on 28 account of Ron's failure to act or look in the way expected of a man. Accordingly,

1 the response to the Gomez incident, in light of prior warnings to Plaintiff, was not 2 discriminatory or retaliatory.

3 (b) Disciplinary Actions Taken by Management

4 Plaintiff argues that she received a number of disciplinary actions during this 5 time period that were on account of her appearance. The record demonstrates that 6 Plaintiff received a number of disciplinary actions during the relevant time period.
7 In reviewing the disciplinary actions, it is not the Court's role to determine whether 8 the action should have been taken, whether there was any truth in the allegations, 9 or whether the time-period of the suspensions were appropriate. Instead, the Court 10 needs to conclude that Plaintiff was subjected to these disciplinary actions because 11 of her physical appearance. Plaintiff's evidence did not establish this motivation.
12 All the disciplinary actions were reviewed by various levels of management. In all 13 the memos and emails that were exchanged regarding the disciplinary actions, 14 there is no indication that anyone in management had any discriminatory animus 15 toward Plaintiff on account of her appearance.

16 The record is void of any direct evidence of discriminatory intent on the part 17 of management, nor has Plaintiff shown that he was treated less favorably than 18 other similarly situated employees during this time period. Likewise, the 19 circumstantial evidence does not support a conclusion that management acted with 20 discriminatory intent because of Plaintiff's appearance. While some of the 21 disciplinary actions appear to be harsh, many were justified by the facts presented 22 to management. Also, many were the result of management's frustration with 23 Plaintiff's lack of supervisory skills and her inability to run an efficient and 24 productive shop. There is nothing in the record, both in the documentation and 25 through the testimony of the employees of the Spokane sector, that anyone in 26 management expressed ill will against Plaintiff on account of his failure to act in 27 the way expected of a man.

28 (c) Actions taken by Mr. Simer and Mr. McCormick

1 Plaintiff maintains that the many memos and complaints made by Mr. Simer
2 and Mr. McCormick were evidence of a hostile workplace environment. If this 3 were true, however, the Court would have to find that Mr. Simer's and Mr.
4 McCormick's motivation for filing their memo and complaints was on account of 5 Plaintiff's appearance, and that management was aware of this motivation. The 6 record does not establish that the motivation was because Ron failed to act in the 7 way expected of a man or that management was so aware. Instead, there were 8 numerous instances where Mr. Simer and Mr. McCormick were frustrated with 9 Plaintiff's management style. Some of these instances were confirmed by 10 management.

11 (d) Threats by Mr. McCormick

12 Plaintiff testified that in December 2001, Mr. McCormick reported to her 13 that he was staying at the Mossmans' house and, in doing so, implied that he would 14 have access to assault rifles. Plaintiff perceived this statement as a threat, and she 15 and her family left for vacation a day earlier than planned because she feared for 16 her family's safety. Plaintiff also filed a memo regarding Mr. McCormick's 17 statements in which she reported that she had contracted with a security company 18 to patrol her house because she feared for the safety of her family while she was 19 out of town on assignment. Plaintiff's reaction to Mr. McCormick's statement was 20 not reasonable or based in fact. There is nothing to suggest that Mr. McCormick 21 made these statements because Ron failed to act in the way expected of a man.

22 (2) October 3, 2002 to December 31, 2002

23 Plaintiff claims there were four instances of harassment or discrimination 24 that occurred during this period: (a) management ordering her to not talk about 25 personal issues with other employees; (b) management ordering her to not wear a 26 dress; (c) management prohibiting her from using the women's restroom; (d) the 27 questioning by Mr. Reome. None of these instances constitute direct or 28 circumstantial evidence of discriminatory intent. See Vasquez, 349 F.3d at 638.

1 Likewise these instances do not establish that other employees with qualifications 2 similar to her own were treated more favorably. See Godwin, 150 F.3d at 1220.

3 (a) Prohibition on Speaking about Personal Issues

4 Some of the employees were uncomfortable with Plaintiff's change from 5 male to female and complained to management. Specifically, some female 6 employees did not feel comfortable being asked about make-up or other grooming 7 issues by Plaintiff, and so informed management. On December 6, 2002, Mr.
8 Foust ordered Plaintiff to refrain from discussing any of her personal matters or 9 issues with agency employees. She was warned that any future communication of 10 this type may result in disciplinary action being taken against her. Plaintiff argues 11 that no other employee was subject to this prohibition, nor had anyone been subject 12 to this type of written order.

13 As of December, when the warning was given, the coworkers knew only that 14 a person that they knew and had related to as a man was dressing as a woman and 15 had changed his name from Ron to Tracy. The existence of a protocol or possible 16 surgery was not known to them. In this context, it is not surprising that some 17 coworkers were uncomfortable with Plaintiff and preferred not to discuss personal 18 matters with her.<sup>7</sup>

19 The employer is required to create a workplace that is comfortable for all 20 employees. Within the workplace there are boundaries regarding appropriate and 21 inappropriate conversations. These boundaries are dictated by the relationship 22 between the people who are having the conversation. On one end of the spectrum 23 are people who are good friends who are comfortable discussing intimate details of 24 each other's life. On the other end, co-employees may be mere acquaintances.
25 Social rules dictate that, generally, it is not appropriate to discuss intimate details 26

27 <sup>7</sup>As is evident from the Plaintiff's latter success in the same workplace, the 28 level of comfort increased with information, exposure, and time.

1 of one's life with acquaintances or people who are not close friends. Testimony 2 revealed that Plaintiff had difficulty in understanding and respecting these 3 boundaries. There was testimony that Plaintiff would discuss his appearance, 4 including his breast size, with people he had only recently met. Coworkers
5 testified that they were uncomfortable talking about make-up with Plaintiff. There 6 was no testimony presented that other employees had similar problems, or that 7 other employees were discussing their breast size, or other body attributes that are 8 distinctly sexual. Thus, to the extent that Plaintiff was issued a written directive 9 that was not given to other similarly situated employees, it was because Plaintiff 10 needed direction and assistance in understanding appropriate workplace 11 boundaries. Management's failure to address complaints about employee 12 discomfort with discussions of personal matters could have been criticized as 13 failure to stop unwelcome conduct. Thus, management ordering Plaintiff to refrain 14 from speaking about personal issues did not create a hostile workplace 15 environment, nor did it rise to the level of sexual discrimination or retaliation.

16 (b) Prohibition on Wearing a Dress

17 Shortly after making the transition, Plaintiff showed up at work in a dress.
18 Some of the employees complained that the dress was inappropriate. Mr. Foust 19 ordered Plaintiff not to wear dresses to work. He considered it inappropriate and 20 unsafe, given the job performed by Plaintiff.

21 Title VII does not apply to grooming and dress standards, unless the 22 standards impose unequal burdens on one sex. Jespersen v. Harrah's Operating 23 Co., Inc., 392 F.3d 1076, 1079 (9th Cir. 2004). In Jespersen, the female bartenders 24 were required to wear makeup and wear their hair "teased, curled, or styled" each 25 day. Id. The male bartenders were prohibited from wearing makeup and were 26 only required to maintain short haircuts. Id. The circuit held that employers may 27 adopt different gender-differentiated dress and grooming requirements, but the 28 standards could not impose a greater burden on one sex than the other. Id. at 1080.

1 Plaintiff's discrimination claim based on gender-differentiated dress 2 requirements could be viewed from two different perspectives: (1) women in the 3 shop were being treated differently because they could not wear dresses in the 4 shop; or (2) men were being treated differently because the women in the 5 administrative office could wear dresses, but the men in the shop could not.<sup>8</sup> 6 Either one fails because the prohibition on wearing dresses did not impose a 7 greater burden on one sex than the other.

8 (c) Prohibition on Using Women's Restroom

9 Shortly after making her transition, Plaintiff was advised that she could not 10 use the women's restroom. She agreed that she would use a third "unisex" 11 bathroom. However, she was offended when she was told that she could not use 12 the women's restroom in other Border Patrol locations. When she was at a 13 location where there was no unisex bathroom available, management required 14 Plaintiff to use the men's restroom. This was offensive to Plaintiff and she refused 15 to do so. When Plaintiff was in the outlying stations, she would use the restroom 16 at a nearby gas station.

17 The Court is unaware of any requirement imposed on an employer to permit 18 a person in Plaintiff's situation to use the women's restroom. Perhaps, in the 19 future, the law may impose on an employer an obligation to comply with medical 20 directions for an employee who is going through a gender change. However, at 21 this time, there is no such obligation. Moreover, the management had no notice of 22 the protocol in the period in question, and the direction to use the men's restroom 23 in other locations was not discriminatory.

24
25 <sup>8</sup>Management's orders not to wear a dress to work coincided with Plaintiff's 26 decision to participate in society as a woman. At that time, however, Plaintiff had 27 not made the decision to undergo sexual reassignment surgery. Thus, at that time, 28 she was psychologically and mentally a female, yet biologically, she was a male.

1 CONCLUSION

2 The Court is sure that Plaintiff felt isolated and unfairly treated at the Border 3 Patrol. Part of this feeling was caused by the difficulty her coworkers had in 4 dealing with the manifestations of Plaintiff's gender conflict. Nevertheless, the 5 evidence does not show that this confusion caused the Border Patrol, or her 6 coworkers, to discriminate against her because she failed to conform to a sex 7 stereotype. Instead, action taken by her employer and her coworkers were on 8 account of legitimate workplace concerns, including supervisory deficiencies and 9 inappropriate conversations.

10 The Court is sympathetic to Plaintiff's situation and is understanding of the 11 emotional toil workplace conflict can cause in a person's life. It is heartened by 12 the fact that it appears that the workplace environment at United States Customs 13 and Border Protection has improved for her, and currently things are going well for 14 Plaintiff at her job. During the period in question, there is no doubt that working at 15 United States Customs and Border Protection was very difficult for Plaintiff.
16 However, Title VII requires more than a difficult workplace. To be successful in 17 establishing a claim under Title VII, Plaintiff carries the burden of establishing 18 discriminatory motive on the part of United States Customs and Border Protection.
19 In this case, the record does not support a finding for Plaintiff that United States
20 Customs and Border Protection violated Title VII. Therefore, Plaintiff's Title VII 21 claims fail.

22 Accordingly, for the forgoing reasons, it is HEREBY ORDERED:

23 1. Plaintiff's claims are dismissed and judgment is granted in favor of 24 Defendant.

25 2. The District Court Executive shall enter judgment in favor of the 26 Defendant.
